

Saturday, September 17, 1983, p. 1

Jean Colville called at 930 AM and woke me up. Very unusual. I can't remember the last time that I slept that late. She had to report on her Beta Sigma Phi meeting on Thursday; meeting somewhere in the R.P. Carbondale area, I believe. Elizabeth Dempsey and Jean talked about me. Jean did a "spiel" on me as mayor; Jean also tried to get her sorority to become more actively involved in the City of Carbondale. She reported on the Old Catholic Cemetery -- I'm not sure how she brought up the topic to her "sisters" but at any rate they had quite a chat about that Cemetery. Jean reported what she had learned from Donald and me about the desecration of the Cemetery by the Belmont Neighborhood Association: Racket Brook is now strewn with tombstones that were bull-dozed over the bank when the Cemetery was allegedly moved, which is a hoax that has been perpetrated by I'm not exactly sure whom -- perhaps St. Rose Church itself -- perhaps a few of the bodies were moved but the majority are still there. I understand that the bones of one of the "removed" bodies periodically surfaces and are quickly "identified" by the officers of the Belmont Neighborhood Association as being those of a "dog" or some other animal that was buried by someone recently. The whole process takes place very quickly and quietly and it is all quite shocking; and yet no action is taken against the men who are responsible for this vile crime. Anyhow, Jean brought up the point at her sorority meeting that "things apparently surface every so often in the 'former' Old Catholic Cemetery at the corner of Belmont and Robinson. At that a discussion took place as to whether or not there were any bodies still in the 'former' Cemetery -- now a playground. Jean reported that she and Ben Dunn at one point, having consumed a little too much alcohol, were moved to examine the "sidewalk stones" at Dr. Martin's and they turned a few over and, as they had heard, the sidewalk stones were tombstones that had been removed from the Old Catholic Cemetery by Dr. Martin who apparently made it known that he was only removing the stones of families that were "extinct." I wonder when this was done -- when the Cemetery was being moved or before. Such news! It must have been quite an interesting Beta Sigma Phi meeting. Keep up the good word, Jean.